Dr. Harold Olin

At the heart of Greenfield-Central's pursuit of academic excellence is a student-centric approach, where every child is viewed as an individual with unique potential and needs. The district aligns its operations and strategies with core values that prioritize the welfare of its students while considering the broader community context, including local businesses and government entities.

Dr. Olin emphasizes the importance of serving the community's needs, but always prioritizing decisions that benefit the students. "Are we doing the things that are in the best interest of the students we serve?" he questions, illustrating his decision-making filter. Dr. Olin's strategy for the district's success involves a meticulous approach to various aspects of the educational experience. "That comes down to everything we do," he states, "from staffing and curriculum choices to the development and maintenance of school facilities." Each decision is weighed against its potential impact on students and the community, ensuring alignment with the district's core values of service and support.

CHAMPIONING STEM AND ADVANCED LEARNING

Greenfield-Central High School, under the leadership of Principal Jason Cary, distinguishes itself through a strong emphasis on science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) alongside innovative educational opportunities that bridge high school and higher education. Cary proudly highlights the school's exemplary STEM program, which is primarily notable for an institution of its size. With multiple Project Lead the Way pathways and robust offerings in mathematics and engineering, Greenfield-Central stands out in the region. This focus on STEM education extends to specialized pathways in engineering and biomedicine, areas where Greenfield-Central offers unique opportunities not readily available at neighboring schools. "We have wonderful teachers in those programs, which are very popular," Cary notes. The success of these pathways places the district as a leader in STEM education, providing students with unparalleled opportunities to explore and excel in these critical fields.

Dr. Olin, with evident pride in the breadth and depth of educational opportunities offered at Greenfield-Central Community Schools, proudly reflects on the district's achievements in technology beyond the classroom, citing examples of student success in competitive arenas such as the Vex Robotics and NASA moon rover competition. These accomplishments exemplify the district's innovative use of technology and the opportunities provided to students to apply their learning in real-world contexts, further enhancing their skills and experiences.

Inclement Weather

Several factors are weighed by our weather team prior to making decisions to delay or close school, with student safety always being at the center. We recognize that last-minute school delays or closures can cause hardships for our families. Therefore, every effort is meant to make decisions to close or delay school as early as we can, ideally by 6am.

The school corporation's alert system is utilized to provide updates regarding school delays or closures. For that reason, families should ensure their contact information (phone numbers and email addresses) are updated during student registration each summer. If there is a need to dismiss students early from school due to inclement weather, parents should make sure that their children understand their family's early release plan.

Several public networks and social media accounts are used to communicate school delays and closures.

OVERCOMING RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION CHALLENGES

The education sector, not unlike many others, faces significant hurdles in recruitment and retention, particularly in the hiring and sustaining of high-caliber teaching staff. These challenges are not unique to any one district but are felt across the board, from rural to urban settings. In the context of Greenfield-Central Community Schools, the administrative team offered a transparent look into the proactive strategies and innovative financial management approaches they have impleaimed at bolstering counseling, social work, literacy initiatives, and STEM education.

ADVANCING SAFETY AND SECURITY ACROSS CAMPUSES

School safety has ascended to the forefront of educational priorities nationwide. Greenfield-Central Community Schools have acknowledged this imperative and actively engaged in strategic enhancements to their security infrastructure and personnel. Day delineates the multifaceted approach to bolstering security, starting with infrastructure upgrades.

nifies a profound obligation to the physical security of the schools and the social and emotional well-being of our students and staff. G-C now has five full-time SROs,” Day reveals, emphasizing the importance of having dedicated, familiar faces within the schools.

Cary highlights recent construction projects to enhance security at the high school, saying, “We did some construction this past summer... We felt like there were ways to make our entrance a little safer and more secure than it had been in the past.” The redesign of the main office and attendance office to streamline student movement and centralize entry points shows the thoughtful consideration given to every aspect of school safety, from structural modifications to operational practices.

foresight is crucial for sustaining and enhancing the district’s educational excellence.

Moreover, Dr. Olin identifies a significant programmatic shift toward broadening preschool and early childhood opportunities—a response to a pronounced community need. “The biggest shift we’re looking at is finding ways to expand preschool and early childhood opportunities for our community,” he asserts. “This expansion is a direct answer to feedback from major employers and a collaborative effort with local government to fill a critical gap in Greenfield’s educational landscape.”

These and other initiatives will broaden educational access and bolster teacher retention by providing childcare solutions for staff, illustrating the district’s holistic approach to enhancing the academic environment for students and educators. “We’re looking at finding ways to better support not only our teaching staff but also the larger community that we serve,” Dr. Olin explains.

As Greenfield-Central Community Schools embark on these pivotal projects, their clear vision for the future—a blend of strategic foresight, community collaboration, and a pledge to early childhood education—positions them to meet the challenges and opportunities of the coming years with confidence and purpose. This strategy aims to fortify the district’s infrastructure and programmatic offerings and to nurture the next generation of learners from their earliest years, ensuring a bright future for the community it serves.

mented to attract and retain talent within their district.

Nathaniel (Nate) Day has been the business manager for five years, and the corporation has been incredibly aggressive about increasing teacher salaries during his tenure. “There has been an increase of over $12,000 in starting teacher salaries, and we’ve moved the needle on the average teacher salary from $49,000 to almost $64,000 in this time frame,” Dr. Olin elaborates.

This ambitious approach necessitated finding efficiencies in other areas of school operations and leveraging grants to support critical programs without compromising teacher salaries. Dr. Olin illustrates this with examples of substantial grants received

“In each of these programs, we make sure we set aside some money for safety and security upgrades,” he states, shedding light on the integrated security enhancements accompanying the district’s broader infrastructural developments. The initiative to secure entryways, enhance surveillance through additional security cameras, and implement electronic security controls represents a deliberate effort to modernize safety protocols across the district’s facilities. The new performing arts center, in particular, embodies this modern security ethos with centralized electronic security measures.

Moreover, the strategic increase in the number of school resource officers (SROs) sig-

STRATEGIC PRIORITIES AND EXPANDING EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION

As Greenfield-Central Community Schools move into the fall of 2024, their focus sharpens on strategic planning and addressing critical community needs, notably in early childhood education. Dr. Olin discusses some of the pivotal initiatives on the horizon.

“We’re actually just completed a school facility study and a demographic study,” he discloses, “as part of proactive steps to align our infrastructure and resources with future requirements.” This dual approach gauges current capacities and limitations, further enabling us to forecast and prepare for the community’s evolving needs. Such strategic
